Five year plans are out, 15-year vision is in. Burying yet another Nehru legacy linked to the country's economic policies, the Narendra Modi government has decided to discontinue the plans from the current one that ends in March 2017, reports Siddhartha. It will bring in a longer vision of 15 years that will factor in social and sustainable development goals. From April 2017, the government intends to sew up a seven year strategy to convert its vision into a policy that can be implemented, sources said. The five year plans focused on social and economic sectors, the new plan extends to defense and internal security.
