ABSTRACT

The design and construction of correctional facilities play a crucial role in fostering rehabilitation, ensuring security, and promoting the well-being of inmates. This abstract outlines the key elements of an innovative architectural project aimed at redefining prison. The primary purpose of this project is to create a correctional facility that goes beyond traditional models, focusing on rehabilitation, community reintegration, and inmate well-being. The objectives include the development of a secure, humane, and sustainable environment that meets the evolving needs of both inmates and staff.
